Robin Jebavy: Recent Paintings

Through May 31, 2015

Robin Jebavy makes still life paintings of glassware. Her project, however, is much larger: to offer the viewer an experience that evokes the original, sublime, oceanic feelings of union with the strange and mysterious “other,” of self with universe. Jebavy employs glassware forms to construct altar-like architectural spaces that evoke Baroque artworks, illusionistic Italian ceiling paintings, and cathedrals.

Dan Torop: Frozen Period

June 14-August 23, 2015

Opening reception: Sunday, June 14, 3-5 pm FREE

In a series of residencies beginning in 2013, Dan Torop made photographs on the Lynden grounds which integrate an historical text—Meriwether Lewis’s June 14, 1805 diary entry describing a day and night in the environs of the Great Falls of the Missouri River—with present day visual explorations. Mindful of ecologist Aldo Leopold’s description of a nearby landscape, Torop responded to the passage of seasons, animals, and objects across the site, sometimes intervening, always observing. Frozen Period refers to a season—the frigid winter of 2014—and an historical epoch—the 32 years between the death of the sculpture garden’s owner and creator, Peg Bradley, and its opening to the public—and is both a subjective description based upon a year’s photographic work and an examination of the very act of exploration and observation.
